Do people in college actually have sex and do drugs and have friends? Losers cope in the comments

I majored in chemistry and was not a fratboy, yet I averaged 2-3 parties a week for the first three years of my undergrad education. Anyone who says they're too busy studying is just covering for the fact that they have no friends.

For chemistry PhD programs at least, they make their work easier by literally throwing out any applications with a GPA below 3.5. One program I applied to would accept you if you have less than a 3.5, but you would immediately be put on academic probation the day you started it is time that I step forward and confess to a disturbing, dark secret I have been hiding from you all. Last night, distinguished dramatar  @CRUSTY posted this,  garnering the attention of several simp-antis. The truth is, that was NOT crusty. It was ME. I took his phone to post nice things about myself because I am an attention seeking foid. I am filled with sorrow and regret at my heinous actions, and I promise to maybe never do it again. Perhaps.

Speaking My Truth: confessing my sins

 @CRUSTY, you're off the simp hook. For Now.

Why do strangers always stare at me and talk about me in public? (self.mentalillness)

I have depression and OCD. I feel like every time I go out in public, there's at least one group of people that stares at me or does double takes and it's freaking me out. This even happens even when I'm driving so it's not a body language/posture thing. My friends have consistently told me I'm fairly good looking but I feel like everyone in public is judging me and whispering about me for some reason I can't figure out.

Just today I was driving home in traffic and there was a pair of women on the other side of the road. One of them stared at me for like five seconds even though I averted eye contact like usual. Then I glanced over and saw her whispering to her friend, hand covering her mouth and all, and then her friend started looking at me too. I am 100% sure they were looking at me, it was DIRECT eye contact. This has happened many times before where I look at someone for 0.5 seconds, they make eye contact, whisper their friend, and then the friend stares at me too.

What the fuck is wrong with me? How does everyone know that I'm weak, that I'm an easy target?
